TELLS HOW TO ATTRACT BIRDS IN THE NORTHEASTERN STATES -----

It is easy to have more birds about the home.

The Bureau of Biological Survey, U. S. Department of Agriculture tells, "How to Attract Birds in Northeastern United States." This is the title of Farmers' Bulletin 621-F, by W. L. McAtee of the Bureau of Biological Survey, just issued in a revised edition. Protection and the provision of suitable nesting places, food, and water are what attract the birds.

One of a series intended to describe methods for various parts of the country, this bulletin covers New England, New York, Pennsylvania, and northern New Jersey. It includes information of general value, and also discusses shrubs and trees attractive to birds and hardy in this region. It also tells where to find more detailed information in Government publications.

This publication, Farmers' Bulletin No. 621-F, may be obtained free on request to the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.
